GOOD NEWS STORIES

NFL'S JAMES SMITH-WILLIAMS HELPS DOMESTIC VIOLENCE SURVIVORS WITH PETS

A pro football player is tackling sexual and domestic violence issues thanks to his unique platform — and a personal quest to be a good man. [...] As a student at North Carolina State University, James Smith-Williams heard an advocate named Brenda Tracy speak about surviving a gang rape by college football players. She shared a message that deeply resonated with him. [...] “Her biggest takeaway was, ‘If you’re a good man, what are you doing to be a good man?’” Smith-Williams told TODAY. “That really stuck with me.” [...] Since then, the 25-year-old defensive end for the Washington Commanders has committed himself to raising awareness of sexual and domestic violence issues — and supporting survivors. [...] He founded the Champions program of Tracy's nonprofit Set The Expectation to create a network of athletes who raise money and awareness for nonprofits that support survivors of sexual and interpersonal violence.

During October's Domestic Violence Awareness Month and beyond, he's supporting the Purple Leash Project, an initiative by Purina and the nonprofit RedRover to help domestic violence shelters become pet-friendly.

Loving God, there are so many pressures to be a certain way, act a certain way just to fit in and belong. I don't want to be fake or feel I need to prove anything. Help me to be "me," to be real and authentic. Give me the courage I need to be who I am. Amen.
