GOOD NEWS STORIES

'BIKE BUSES' CATCH ON AS A COOL WAY TO COMMUTE TO SCHOOL.
WHAT ARE THEY?
ORGANIZERS SAY THE GROUP BIKE RIDES HAVE RESULTED IN HAPPIER AND HEALTHIER STUDENTS.

"Bike buses" — adult-led group bike rides to school — are taking over neighborhoods.

Many families are ditching cars for a sweatier morning ride with friends, biking miles in organized clusters led by grown-up volunteers. The effort is a call to combat climate change, encourage exercise and reduce school drop-off traffic.

And, parents and kids both say, it just makes the children happier. Minneapolis dad Devin Olson organized a bike bus for his local school zone. The co-founder of Minneapolis Bike Parks, a grassroots organization that makes parks more bike-friendly, Olson says cycling "creates connectivity between all walks of life."

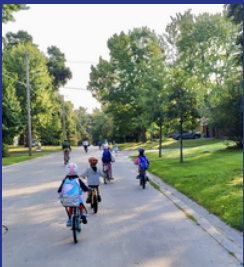

Six years ago, Olson partnered with Minneapolis Public Schools to helm a 2-mile bike bus that dropped off students at two elementary schools.

So far, Olson has led 11 semi-annual bike buses that have grown from about 60 participants to nearly 150.

"We meet at 8 a.m. to play soccer and football and eat donuts," Olson told TODAY Parents. "Then we review safety measures and start our ride. It's nothing but laughing, yelling and pure joy."

The group makes about eight stops along the way to pick up children, many of whom are accompanied by parents or older siblings. Olson said one family who lives across the street from school bikes two miles — in the opposite direction — just so they can join the morning ride.

Loving God,
Help me be a friend this week.
When I see people hurting others through their words, actions or on social media, help me be a friend to the one who is being picked on.
Give me courage and compassion so I can stand up against bullying.
Amen.
