FOSTERING GLOBAL TECH TALENT

Kenya | In rural Kenya, 4,000 students across 10 schools are busy sharpening their computer skills on refurbished machines. They learn everything from basic typing to coding to robotics, and even take part in remote tutorials with NASA scientists. Before participating in these classes, however, very few of the students even knew what a computer was.

The project, TechLit Africa, is the brainchild of Nelly Cheboi, a 29-year-old software engineer who grew up in poverty in the Kenyan village of Mogotio. In 2012, she received a full scholarship to attend college in Illinois, where she discovered a love for computer science. Upon returning to Kenya after graduation, she founded her own school, Zawadi, which became a launching pad for TechLit. Her organization now works with American colleges and businesses to source the recycled computers.

For Cheboi, TechLit is about more than just giving children a pastime: she hopes the students will use their newfound skills to find professional opportunities.

"If all you have is your small village, then your thinking is small," Cheboi says. "But once you come to the Internet, you become global—and by being global, you can help the world." —Robert Liwanag

Prayer

Loving God,
it is the end of the semester
and the end of the year.

There is so much to do
and exams are around the corner.

Help me to be my best self for my education.

Help me not to take my stress and frustrations out on others--guide me towards peace and purposefulness.

Most of all, Lord, help me to stay calm and not get carried away with worry.

Be my anchor in these times.

Our Lady of the Assumption, pray for us.

Amen.

If you need support there are many at Assumption who care about you:
